

Harlow House Park

This home was built in 1900 on what was known as the Harlow Farm by Fred Harlow, son of Captain John Harlow, Troutdale's founder. The house is relatively unchanged from the day it was built. The City purchased the house and grounds in 1979. It sold the house to the Troutdale Historical Society for use as a museum, but retained the grounds as a public park. The Harlow House has been named to the National Register of Historic Places.

The site is comprised of 1.4 acres and is located off East Columbia River Highway. It is bordered by residential property on the north and south sides, and vacant land on the west. Facilities include picnic tables, benches, and a parking area. This site is also the

Supporting Documents

Harlow House Park Trail Map 443.37 KB

Address

Harlow House Park
726 E. Historic Columbia River Hwy
Troutdale, OR 97060
United States

View Slideshow

View in Google Maps

45.537971, -122.382532